Half See 2012 Campaign as “Dull,” “Too Long” Modest Interest in Gadhafi Death, Iraq Withdrawal

Americans divided their attention last week among several breaking news stories – from the death of Moammar Gadhafi in Libya to the release of dozens of dangerous wild animals in Ohio to the announced withdrawal of U.S. troops from Iraq– while still keeping a close watch on news about the nation’s economy.

No single story stands out in the most recent weekly News Interest Index survey, conducted Oct. 20-23, 2011, among 1,009 adults by the Pew Research Center for the People & the Press. While 15% say the condition of the economy was their top story, about as many cite Gadhafi’s death (13%), the release of wild animals in Ohio (13%) or news about the 2012 presidential candidates (13%) as the news they followed most closely.

News Interest vs. News Coverage

	News Interest	News Coverage
Economy	15	12
Ohio wild animals	13	4
Death of Gadhafi	13	17
2012 elections	13	17
Withdrawal from Iraq	12	5
Wall Street protests	9	4

News interest shows the percentage of people who say they followed this story most closely, Pew Research Center for the People & the Press, Oct. 20-23, 2011. News coverage shows the percentage of news coverage devoted to each story, Pew Research Center’s Project for Excellence in Journalism, Oct. 17-23, 2011.

Another 12% say their top story was President Obama's announcement that he will withdraw all U.S. forces from Iraq by the end of 2011; 9% say they followed news about the anti-Wall Street protests in New York and other cities most closely.

Though it came late in the week, Gadhafi's violent death topped news coverage, along with news about the 2012 presidential election. Each made up 17% of the newshole, according to a separate analysis by the Pew Research Center's Project for Excellence in Journalism (PEJ). News about the economy in general accounted for 12% of coverage, not including 4% devoted specifically to the Occupy Wall Street protests.

Early Views of Campaign 2012

Americans are generally critical of the early stages of the 2012 presidential campaign. More say the campaign has been dull (51%) than interesting (35%). With more than a year to go before the election, 50% already say the campaign is too long. The public is evenly split over whether the campaign is too negative (44% too negative, 41% not). And while 40% say the campaign has been informative, 49% have found it not informative.

In October 2007, when both parties had contests for their nominations, far more people (66%) said the campaign was too long. About the same percentage as viewed the campaign as dull (55%) as do so today. However, as the primaries began in early 2008, fewer people said the campaign was dull. By February, just 25% said it was dull and 70% said it was interesting.

Currently, Republicans are more positive in their assessments than are Democrats or independents. For example, half of Republicans (50%) say the campaign has been interesting, compared with 37% of Democrats and 29% of independents. While 51% of Republicans say the campaign has not been too negative, nearly as many Democrats and independents (46% each) say it has been too negative. Republicans also are more likely to say the campaign has been informative: 54% say this, compared with 41% of Democrats and 36% of independents.

On the question of whether the campaign is too long, there is little disagreement: 47% of Republicans say this, as do 51% of Democrats and 54% of independents. Four years ago, three quarters of Republicans (74%) said the campaign was too long at this point, compared with 61% of Democrats. About two-thirds of independents (68%) agreed.

The Week's News

Nearly four-in-ten (38%) say they very closely followed reports about the condition of the U.S. economy last week. The level of interest has changed little in recent months as the economy continues to struggle and unemployment remains high. In total, news about the economy made up 16% of coverage, with 12% devoted to general economic conditions and 4% devoted primarily to the Occupy Wall Street protests.

Three-in-ten (30%) say they very closely followed President Obama's announcement that the U.S. would withdraw all U.S. forces from Iraq by the end of 2011. Though Republican presidential candidates have hammered away at Obama's decision, Democrats say they followed this news more closely than Republicans (38% vs. 26%). Three-in-ten independents say they followed this news very closely. News about Iraq and Obama's announcement accounted for 5% of coverage, according to PEJ.

Americans in recent years have paid closer attention to news about plans for U.S. troops in Iraq than conditions on the ground there. Last December, just 19% said they were very closely following news about the current situation and events in Iraq.

Still, Obama's announcement generated less interest than several other major policy announcements about Iraq. In March 2009, 40% said they very closely followed Obama's announcement that he planned to withdraw most combat troops by August 2010. And in January 2007, as President George W. Bush laid out plans for a surge in troop levels in Iraq, 46% said they were following news about the war very closely.

A quarter of the public (25%) says they followed news about Gadhafi's death very closely. After what has been a tumultuous year in the Middle East and North Africa – and with Gadhafi already out of power – this news attracted relatively modest interest.

By comparison, 37% in early April said they very closely followed news about air strikes by the U.S. and allies in support of rebels fighting Gadhafi's forces. Looking elsewhere in the region, roughly four-in-ten (39%) in February said they were very closely following the anti-government protests in Egypt and the resignation of that nation's long-time ruler, Hosni Mubarak.

About a quarter (23%) say they very closely followed news about the release of lions, tigers and other animals from a private wild animal farm in Ohio. Police killed most of the animals, fearing they could hurt humans if not put down quickly. This news made up 4% of the coverage analyzed by PEJ.

Overall, 13% say this was their top story of the week. Nearly two-in-ten women (18%) say they followed this news more closely than any other story, putting it at the top of their list along with the economy (14% most closely). For men, this was a lower priority: 8% say this was the news they followed most closely, while 17% say the economy was their top story.

News Interest

% following each story very closely

Which one story did you follow most closely?

About two-in-ten (21%) say they very closely followed news last week about the candidates for the 2012 presidential elections. As has been the case in recent weeks, Republicans tracked this news more closely than Democrats or independents. Nearly four-in-ten Republicans (37%) say they followed campaign news very closely, compared with 20% of Democrats and 16% of independents.

About two-in-ten (19%) say they very closely followed news about the anti-Wall Street protests in New York and other cities. This was the top story for 9%. Comparable numbers of Democrats, Republicans and independents say they followed this news very closely (23%, 19% and 17%, respectively). Coverage dropped from 10% two weeks ago to 4% this past week.

These findings are based on the most recent installment of the weekly News Interest Index, an ongoing project of the Pew Research Center for the People & the Press. The index, building on the Center's longstanding research into public attentiveness to major news stories, examines news interest as it relates to the news media's coverage. The weekly survey is conducted in conjunction with The Project for Excellence in Journalism's News Coverage Index, which monitors the news reported by major newspaper, television, radio and online news outlets on an ongoing basis. In the most recent week, data relating to news coverage were collected Oct. 17-23, and survey data measuring public interest in the top news stories of the week were collected Oct. 20-23 from a nationally representative sample of 1,009 adults.

About the News Interest Index

The News Interest Index is a weekly survey conducted by the Pew Research Center for the People & the Press aimed at gauging the public's interest in and reaction to major news events. This project has been undertaken in conjunction with the Project for Excellence in Journalism's News Coverage Index, an ongoing content analysis of the news. The News Coverage Index catalogues the news from top news organizations across five major sectors of the media: newspapers, network television, cable television, radio and the internet. Each week (from Monday through Sunday) PEJ compiles this data to identify the top stories for the week. (For more information about the Project for Excellence in Journalism's News Coverage Index, go to www.journalism.org.) The News Interest Index survey collects data from Thursday through Sunday to gauge public interest in the most covered stories of the week.

Results for this survey are based on telephone interviews conducted Oct. 20-23, 2011, among a national sample of 1,009 adults 18 years of age or older living in the continental United States (606 respondents were interviewed on a landline telephone, and 403 were interviewed on a cell phone, including 195 who had no landline telephone). The survey was conducted by interviewers at Princeton Data Source under the direction of Princeton Survey Research Associates International. A combination of landline and cell phone random digit dial samples were used; both samples were provided by Survey Sampling International. Interviews were conducted in English. Respondents in the landline sample were selected by randomly asking for the youngest adult male or female who is now at home. Interviews in the cell sample were conducted with the person who answered the phone, if that person was an adult 18 years of age or older.

The combined landline and cell phone sample are weighted using an iterative technique that matches gender, age, education, race, Hispanic origin, region, and population density to parameters from the March 2010 Census Bureau's Current Population Survey. The sample is also weighted to match current patterns of telephone status based on extrapolations from the 2010 National Health Interview Survey. The weighting procedure also accounts for the fact that respondents with both landline and cell phones have a greater probability of being included in the combined sample and adjusts for household size within the landline sample. Sampling errors and statistical tests of significance take into account the effect of weighting. The following table shows the sample sizes and the error attributable to sampling that would be expected at the 95% level of confidence for different groups in the survey:

Group	Sample Size	Plus or minus ...
Total sample	1,009	4.0 percentage points
Republicans	270	7.5 percentage points
Democrats	300	7.0 percentage points
Independents	347	6.5 percentage points

Sample sizes and sampling errors for other subgroups are available upon request.

In addition to sampling error, one should bear in mind that question wording and practical difficulties in conducting surveys can introduce error or bias into the findings of opinion polls.
